The Mercy of Christ

Throughout the history of mankind, there has always been racism. Some people consider themselves superior to others morally, physically, and culturally. Likewise, there has always been a certain suspicion toward various diseases. In the times of Jesus it may have been leprosy; today it is AIDS. In certain parish, a young man who appeared to be sick sat in a pew and all the people sitting in it immediately got up and went elsewhere. It is assumed, wrongly, that a sick person is responsible for his or her illness; this is why those healthy feel superior and can allow themselves, without doing anything morally wrong, to remove themselves from the sick. They feel that they are protecting themselves and their families; but where is the reasonable and logical basis for such an attitude? It appears that Jesus does not find it because he acts in a very different manner. He does not judge the sick; does not consider that illness is a consequence of sin, and touches the person to heal him.

Sometimes we consider that there are also people who are morally sick and we must stay away and shelter our children from them. The saying "Tell me who you hang with and I will tell you who you are" becomes very real for us; but we can also think of moments when we have felt rejected by others. Have we ever felt like a "leper" isolated by others because of our social status or race? Did we feel this was unfair? Turning this argument around a little, perhaps today is also a good time to examine who has remained with us in those moments when we felt we were not the most suitable person to be around or we made an unforgivable mistake, moments in which perhaps we had judged ourselves as "lepers," not worthy of being with others. Who gave us a hand? Who did not reject us? The mercy of Christ is always with everyone: those who are judged by society and those who judged themselves. No one is denied forgiveness and healing.

For Reflection

When have I felt rejected? When have I justified the rejection of others because of my own errors or condition? When have I been tempted to judge and reject others?

La misericordia de Cristo

A lo largo de la historia de la humanidad, siempre ha habido racismo. Algunos pueblos se consideran superiores a otros moral, física y culturalmente. Asimismo, siempre ha existido un cierto recelo hacia diversas enfermedades. En tiempos de Jesús podría haber sido la lepra; hoy es el Sida. En cierta parroquia, un joven con aspecto de enfermo se sentó en una banca e inmediatamente toda la gente sentada en ella se trasladó a otro lugar. Se supone, erróneamente, que la persona enferma es responsable de su enfermedad; por eso, los sanos se sienten superiores y pueden permitirse, sin hacer algo moralmente incorrecto, separarse de los enfermos. Sienten que se están protegiendo a sí mismos y a sus familias; pero, ¿dónde existe una base razonable y lógica para tal actitud? Tal parece que Jesús no la encuentra, porque actúa de una manera muy distinta. No juzga al enfermo; no considera que la enfermedad sea consecuencia de un pecado y toca a la persona para sanarla.

A veces consideramos que también hay enfermos morales de los que hay que huir y salvar a nuestros hijos. El refrán “Dime con quién andas y te diré quién eres” se nos hace muy verdadero; pero podríamos también pensar en momentos en que hemos sentido el rechazo de otros. ¿Nos hemos sentido alguna vez como un “leproso”, arrinconado por los demás por nuestra condición social o nuestra raza? ¿Sentíamos que eso era injusto? Dándole la vuelta al argumento, quizá también hoy sea buen momento para examinar quién no se separó de nosotros, cuando sentimos que no éramos la persona más recomendable o que habíamos cometido un error imperdonable, cuando quizá nos habíamos juzgado como “leproso”, no dignos de estar con otros. ¿Quién nos tendió la mano? ¿Quién no nos rechazó? La misericordia de Cristo siempre está con todos: aquellos juzgados por la sociedad y aquellos juzgados por ellos mismos. A nadie se le niega el perdón y la sanación.

Para la reflexión

¿Cuándo me he sentido rechazado? ¿Cuándo he justificado el rechazo de otros por mis propios errores o condición? ¿Cuándo me he sentido tentado a juzgar y rechazar a otros?
